*1: The above includes damage from the aftershocks on April 7, July 25, July 31, August 19, and October 10, 2011; and on August 30 and December 7, 2012. Aftershock damage after the November 22, 2016 earthquake whose epicenter was off the coast of Fukushima Prefecture was not included.

*2: Lifelines were fully restored on December 11, 2011 (excluding areas washed out by tsunami).

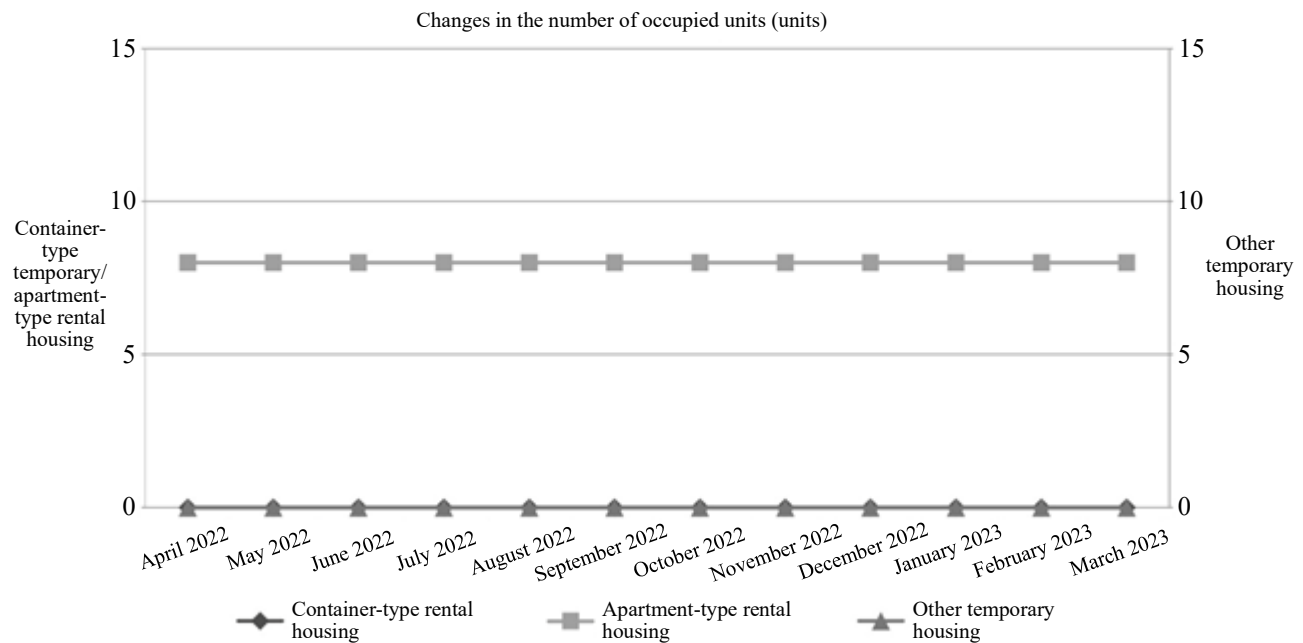

*3: All evacuation shelters in the prefecture were closed on December 30, 2011.

*4: Regarding deaths

- Direct death: Total of those confirmed by the affected municipality to have died owing to the tsunami, house collapse, and other reasons.
- Related death: Total of those certified by the investigative committee for damage condolence money payment as having died owing to the earthquake other than as a direct death.

*5: Flooding on the floor in residential damage has been classified as the extent of damage being partially destroyed or worse (from February 2013).

*1: Other temporary housing includes public housing, public servant housing, and UR(Urban Renaissance Agency) rental housing.

*2: "Number of provided units (houses)" is the number of existing container-type temporary housing units, excluding the number of units that were dismantled after the implementation of disaster prevention group relocation promotion projects, from the number of maintained units (22,095 houses).

Emergency temporary housing is as follows:

- Housing provided by the prefecture based on the Disaster Relief Act to secure housing for households affected by the Great East Japan Earthquake, where houses were completely destroyed, completely burned down, or washed away, and where the resident does not have a home in which to reside.
- The Disaster Relief Act envisioned constructed emergency temporary housing (container-type temporary housing), but owing to the massive and extensive damage of the Great East Japan Earthquake and the loss of many homes, the implementing local government that is the prefecture provided "apartment-type rental housing," where private rental properties were rented, as an emergency temporary housing equivalent to container-type temporary housing. Other existing housing resources, such as public housing, were treated in the same way and were effectively utilized.
