*1: The above includes damage from the aftershocks on April 7, July 25, July 31, August 19, and October 10, 2011; and on August 30 and December 7, 2012. However, aftershock damage after the November 22, 2016, earthquake, whose epicenter was off the coast of Fukushima Prefecture, was not included.

*2: Lifelines were fully restored on December 11, 2011 (excluding areas washed out by the tsunami).

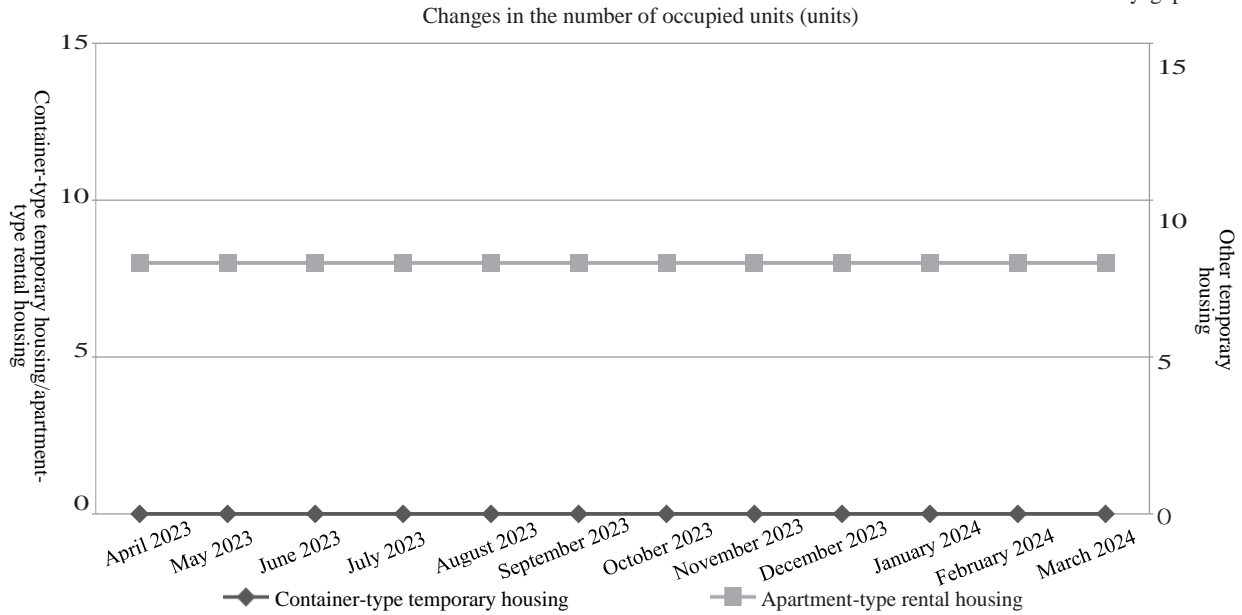

*3: All evacuation shelters in the Prefecture were closed on December 30, 2011.

*4: Regarding deaths

· Direct death: Total of those confirmed by the affected municipality to have died because of the tsunami, house collapse, etc.

· Related death: Total of those certified by the damage condolence money payment investigative committee as having died because of the earthquake but not a direct death.

*5: Flooding of the floor in residential damage has been classified as partially destroyed or worse (from February 2013).

*1: Other temporary housing includes public housing, public servant housing, and UR rental housing.

*2: “Number of provided units (houses)” is the number of existing container-type temporary housing units, excluding the number of units that were dismantled after the implementation of disaster prevention group relocation promotion projects, etc., from the number of maintained units (22,095 houses).

Emergency temporary housing is as follows:

- Housing provided by the prefecture based on the Disaster Relief Act to secure housing for households affected by the Great East Japan Earthquake, where houses were completely destroyed, completely burned down, or washed away, and where the resident does not have a home in which to reside.
- The Disaster Relief Act envisioned the construction of emergency temporary housing (container-type temporary housing). Owing to the massive and extensive damage of the Great East Japan Earthquake and the loss of homes by many residents, the implementing local governments provided “apartment-type rental housing,” where private rental properties were rented, as an emergency temporary housing equivalent to container-type temporary housing. Other existing housing resources, such as public housing, was treated in the same way and was effectively utilized.

Note 1) The values for 2011 are the sum of values from June, when the number of suicides was tabulated, to December. Numbers from 2012 to 2019 are the sum of values from January to December.

Note 2) The "Other" in "3. By profession" is the sum of "Individuals living on interest, dividends, rent, etc.," "Homeless," "Other jobless," etc.

Note 3) For "4. By cause/motive," until 2021, up to three causes and motives that could be clearly inferred from documents supporting the suicide, such as from a suicide note, could be counted per suicide. However, from 2022, up to four causes and motives could be counted per suicide, including cases that could be considered from the testimony of family members and others. Therefore, the number of people with identified causes and motives does not necessarily match the sum of the number of causes and motives.

Note 4) Profession, causes, and motives are kept confidential; individuals cannot be identified by collating with other information.
